Description

On the cyber-auction-block for your bidding pleasure is an interesting & unusual metallic mineral mass recently recovered from a remote arid area of northern Nevada.

This complete impressive individual specimen weighs in at more than 2 kg or about four-and-one-half pounds.

It features a specific gravity in the same range as Nantan or Campo iron meteorites but doesn't oxidize right before your eyes.

When cut, slices reveal an internal appearance similar to that of Dronino - a high-nickel-content iron meteorite.

Externally, the surface has a glazed, partially melted look to it.

For those who have requested that we list a good quality small specimen of this material - here you go.

This material has sold for $8.00 to more than $25 per pound since it first became available almost a year ago. The mystery, controversy & debate regarding precisely what these enigmatic metallic mineral masses actually are continues to this day but snag this specimen for $7.00/pound or less and you've got yourself a bargain... meteorite or not.

Go for the gusto & have a blast bidding!

Shipping to anywhere in North America will be $10.50
