Seller's description

Story goes something like this. My Great Grandfather was working in his field one day and heard a shotgun go off not far enough away. In his words, "a little too close for comfort". As he looked in the general direction of what he thought to be gun fire, he saw a bright light in the sky headed for Earth. He thought it was a plane that was about to crash. As he watched the light drop behind the orchard on the other side of the farm next to his he started running over to where he thought the plane had landed, to help the pilot if he had survived. He didn't find a plane, but he did find a pretty good sized hole with this individual in it. Now the story has many variations to it, depending on who is telling the story and the version I have told you is by far the most boring. But these are the facts, or at least as close to them as I can get. Not to say that any one telling the story would lie about what they were told had actually happened, but you wouldn't believe some of the variations to the story I have heard through the years about what happened that day. So I will just stick to this story, as boring though it may be, comparatively speaking. That days event sparked an interest in my Great Grandfather and he actually ended up with quite a collection of meteorites. Though the story lives on & gets better each time it is told, the meteorites themselves just can't hold a candle to the exciting, historic, & extraordinary events that lead up to & included traveling through Outer Space, with their sites set on taking over the Earth or die trying. As "they" broke through Earth's defenses & entered our atmosphere they sounded the "alarm" alerting my Great Grandfather to the horrific truth that somehow alien's had managed to crash into our atmosphere & he knew it was up to him to stop them from destroying the Earth, somehow. The exact details of how he was able to single-handedly save the Earth have gotten a bit sketchy, but all that really matters is that he did what needed to be done & we are all here today because of it. The meteorites went from being the story to being left out of the story some time ago, & since there are no "rock" collectors in our family, I now have the job of finding good homes for a good many of them. This one was found in California, out in the country between Reedley & Dinuba, though I'm not sure exactly when. It has a thick, dark black fusion crust on most of it, but a good sized corner of the fusion crust was removed revealing a rather pretty dark green rock inside. It measures 1 3/4" x 1 1/4" x 1" at its longest & widest points. It has a strong attraction to even a weak magnet. So, yes it is green and it is an alien from Outer Space, but it has never asked to be taken to our leader, that I am aware of so I don't think this individual poses a risk to our Nations security if you happen to have room for a little green alien from Outer Space in your space.

Shipping is free anywhere in the US. International buyers will pay shipping according to location.

I offer money back if item has been misrepresented or damaged in shipping, less shipping costs. Simply notify me within 48 hours of delivery for return instructions & return address. Buyer pays return shipping.
